There was a collision, one of the shafts of Mr. Sublett's buggy entering the breast of Mr. Logan's horse with the result as above stated. Neither of the men were hurt, but both were badly frightened.

Rev. G. W. Perryman, of Middlesboro, who was born and reared near Montpelier, this county, and who is well-known in Columbia, delivered his celebrated lecture, "A Live Wire," at the court-house last Thursday evening. Judge Jas. Garnett, in a few well-chosen words, presented the speaker to the audience, who occupied one hour and twenty minutes in delivering the most entertaining and practical lectures Columbians have had the pleasure of listening for many years. Mr. Perryman is a cultured gentleman and speaks with great force. His theme was the operation of electricity, its great power and rapidity, showing conclusively that man could be more successful in this world if he would add more steam to his motive power. The lecture was good from start to finish, and while the ideas advanced were simple, they were new, requiring much time and study to get them together. In opening Mr. Perryman paid a high tribute to Columbia and her citizens which was duly appreciated.

A drunken row at Ripatoo Springs, Russell county, resulted in the death of Mrs. Jim Lawless. We gather the following particulars from Rev. W. B. Cave: "Old Field" Jim Lawless, who is a merchant at that place, and a young man named Blair, who was also intoxicated, got into trouble. Lawless ran to his dwelling for a gun, but it had been removed from its accustomed place by his wife and she refused to tell him where it was. He left the house, and meeting Blair, a fight ensued. Mrs. Lawless started hurriedly to separate the combatants, but before reaching them she fell dead. Her remains were carried into her husband's house. By this time Lawless had secured a gun and dismissed every body from the premises. Sunday afternoon Lawless was still drunk and no preparations had been made for the burial. A little liquor, a dead woman and two miserable men.

The Louisville Times says: W. H. Smith, of Kansas City, it is announced in Wall street, has made arrangements to float a sufficient issue of 4 per cent. bonds to complete the extension of the Chesapeake and Nashville railroad from Gallatin to Nashville and from Scottsville, Ky., to Bloomfield or Shelbyville. The Chesapeake and Nashville line belonged to the late C. P. Huntington and E. H. Huntington and C. H. Freed have disposed of it to Mr. Smith and others. The building of this line will be of great benefit to Nashville, besides making a new connecting line from Cincinnati and Louisville to Middle Tennessee and the South. The proposed extension will be through the counties of Davidson and Sumner, in Tennessee, and Allen, Barren, Metcalfe, Adair, Taylor, Marion, Washington and Nelson, in Kentucky. The Wall-street Journal says the deal will certainly be carried out and the line built.
